

Liz Wolf

Sculptor

“Raven’s Reflection”

If the raven comes into your life, expect magic. These creatures are filled with playfulness and intelligence. They are the only bird species to use a stone as a tool, and they can learn words or mimic sounds of other birds. The ravens have been a source of myths and folklore in cultures throughout the world. They have been called tricksters, shape-shifters, healers, omens, and even have the ability to bring us out of the darkness and into the light.

For years, ravens and crows have captured my attention through their amazing antics. They have become a presence in my life and artwork.

In the sculpture "Raven's Reflection" I show an ornate Japanese hand mirror being gently held in the hands of a kimono clad raven. The raven with its head cocked in a very inquisitive position looks at her reflection in the shiny metal surface of the mirror. Then she looks beyond the reflection to where her treasured heart and spirit live. She is the teacher showing us where our true beauty lives. She teaches us to stir the magic of life.